

THE FARGO PROJECT

restore

people

Transform a stormwater detention basin into a multi-functional neighborhood commons?

Yes, that's what The Fargo Project is about. Problem-solving in creative ways, making exciting change, working together to envision what this can be and make it happen.

water

gather

The Fargo Project is a community-based approach to creating a new outdoor space in Fargo. The space, Rabanus Park, is a large 18- acre grassy area contoured to hold water during storms and floods. In an effort to provide beauty, respite, leisure, play and creative exploration for all ages, the Fargo Project Team is engaging the community and seeking creative ideas. Public input and participation is the key to the project. City residents of all ages and backgrounds have a unique opportunity to help imagine, design and build a new kind of place, full of nature, wonder and discovery, and a place to connect with others and celebrate Fargo's rich cultural diversity right in the city.

Counterclockwise from top left: Meetings with TFP Cultural Resource Advisory Group, with City Engineers, TFP Artist Team, gathering ideas with Fargo residents, students at Clara Barton School making placemat invitations for TFP public brainstorming event, and local potters making bowls as gift/invitations for same event.